

MARTHA

Even if what you say is true, I am a woman, and as we have already established, my opinion is not welcome in the House. Why should he give ear to my complaint?

RICHARD SAUNDERS

Because we hang petty thieves in this country, Mrs. Custis, while appointing the great ones to public office.

He produces a paper bill from his coat pocket.

You see, Mr. Robinson serves not only as Speaker of the House, but also, as Treasurer of the Virginia Commonwealth.

Martha examines the bill.

Deliver unto him this bill, and say that it was paid to you by a member of this most revered House, and that you suspect money fraud. You simply wish him to investigate.

MARTHA

And what did ye say ye did again Mr. Saunders?

RICHARD SAUNDERS

Salesman or not, Mrs. Custis, perchance - or perhaps even with intention - I have discovered a most insidious plot, in which the Speaker finds himself embroiled.

MARTHA

What, may I ask, is he guilty of?

SAUNDERS

I know not. I know only that as both Speaker of the House and the Treasurer of His Majesty's Royal Colony of Virginia, the man has unaccountable access to printed money, and I also happen to know that the love of money is the root of all evil.

MARTHA

Indeed, all kinds of evil.

RICHARD SAUNDERS

Mrs. Custis, I present you today with the opportunity to change the course of history - the opportunity to do
George Washington justice.

You shall find the Speaker at Wetherburn's Tavern. No one will look twice at a stove salesman, but beautiful woman such as yourself, the Speaker might give ear to.

(beat)

Or you could remain on this cozy sofa-bench and leave the governing to your "superiors."
